

RADIO VISION DEMONSTRATION ALMOST FAILS IN EXCITEMENT

Operators Become Frustrated in Presence of High Government Officials and Forget Half Their Stunt

By ROBERT MACK. (Copyright, 1925, Consolidated Press Association) WASHINGTON, June 17.—How the first public demonstration of radio vision, held before high officials here Saturday, came near being a failure, was revealed to the writer by Dr. Francis C. Jenkins Monday in a dramatic story of the inventor's side of the historic event.

With Secretary of the Navy Willbur and other prominent government representatives grouped before the apparatus, the operators became so excited that half the stunt was omitted. According to the plans, the vision of a moving object, transmitted over a distance of seven miles, was to be supplemented by a radioed explanation of how the thing was done, all dispatched from one instrument and on a single wave length.

"In my excitement and the excitement of my assistants," Dr. Jenkins laughingly explained Monday, "we forgot to talk."

"But my guests did not know that," he added. Three weeks ago, Dr. Jenkins said, a new hook-up on the radio vision equipment was made. The first test was a success, but when the transmission of moving life was attempted the next day, nothing happened.

The laboratory force continued to work with the machine day and night, using the old navy transmitting station, NOF, and the receiver at the Jenkins laboratory, in the heart of Washington. Last Thursday there was only failure. Then on Friday night the radio-vision began to come through as it had done in the first test.

"When we returned to our work on Friday," Dr. Jenkins said, "the set was still all right, and on Friday night we achieved the best results of three weeks."

Orders were given to keep the transmitter at work continuously until Saturday when Dr. Jenkins telephoned several of the government officials and asked them to view the machine.

Just before the last of the guests Dr. George M. Burgess, director of the bureau of standards, arrived, the machine showed nothing but black spots.

"I was terribly disappointed," Dr. Jenkins said, "and began to frame an alibi. Suggesting to my visitors that the machine might not always work, I led them back to the receiver room, but one look at the face of my assistant told me that he had brought the radio-vision back on the plate."

The tests are to be continued all this week, Dr. Jenkins announced, and many of the leading scientists of the capital are to be invited to view the exciting phenomenon that, for lack of a better word, has been named "radio-vision" by its inventor.

"It is not really radio-vision," Dr. Jenkins declared, "as we do not actually see the moving objects, but rather view a likeness of them much as we do on the ground glass field of the old type camera."

Although the present apparatus can not reproduce the scenes at a baseball game or any other similar event, Dr. Jenkins predicts that, a few years the machine will be developed to the point where radio fans may sit at home and see every move and hear every cheer in a world series.
